

The Whirlwind of Guianga, on October 27, 1928 - Of all the whirlwinds that visited the Philippines the one that did most damage to agriculture very likely was the storm that upset the weather of the Guianga district in the province of Davao on October 27, 1928. It affected an area of about six thousand hectares actually covered by hemp plantations. The total damage done to the abaca plantations by the whirlwind was estimated to be about two million and a half hills of hemp which were worth more than two million pesos at the time. The description of this whirlwind can be seen in the Meteorological Bulletin for October, 1931, under Meteorological Note No. 10.
